There are 265 nominations waiting confirmation by the Senate.

It still sticks in Mr. Conkling's crop that he was made to rule the people instead of the people ruling him.

The front doors to Vanderbilt's new house in New York cost $20,000, and are copies of the famous Ghiberti gates.

It seems that General Sherman, and Whitelaw Reid, of the New York Tribune, will fight the battle of Shiloh over again.

Bob Ingersoll has his elegant copy of Shakespeare handsomely printed in gilt on one of the lids, "The Book of Brains."

Richard A. Proctor, the astronomer says one square inch of the sun's surface would give more than three hundred times more light than one square inch of electric light.

If Judge Davis wants to be the author of one single, independent, honest act, before his time expires, he should vote with the Republicans and break the dead lock in the Senate.

Ex-Lieutenant Governor and Congressman Pound is talked of for Speaker of the House. It is said Mr. Pound is the best looking man in Congress. If this is the best qualification a man can have for that position, we presume Mr. Pound will get it.

This is the first time in the history of the government that the action of one Senator caused a prolonged session of the Senate. Mahone is the cause of all the trouble, but Mahone is right and the Republican party and the administration should stand by him.

Let us see, Vennor promised that spring would be well advanced by the 15th of April, and that on the whole, the month would be one of May mildness. There does appear to be much May mildness so far about the huge snow banks which are still seen in all directions.

It begins to appear that Vice President Arthur might gain the respect of more intelligent people if he would act manly and honestly in the matter of the New York appointments. He can't follow "Puffed Up Vanity" Conkling and claim the respect of the Republican party, or of honorable men outside of it.

There has been quite an advance in the value of paintings during the last century. A portrait of Philip IV. was once sold for $35,000. It will now fetch $25,000 in any gallery in Europe. Van Dyck's burgomaster and his wife, brought $80; it is now valued at $40,000. One of Rembrandt's brought $25,000 soon after it was finished, but to-day it can not be bought for $20,000.

Judge Amos P. Priehard, of this city, has been county judge for twenty-four consecutive years; but Judge Ira B. Brunson, of Prairie du Chien, son of the Rev. Alfred Brunson, D. D., has been county judge of Crawford county for thirty-four consecutive years. He is the oldest county judge (in service) in the State, and probably the oldest in the United States.

Here is another example of the loose way in which the last Legislature did its business. Chapter 298 of the general laws of 1881, approved April 2, abolishes the State board of charities and reform; and yet chapter 233 of the general laws of 1881, approved March 30, says: "Whenever it shall appear to the State board of charities and reform that insufficient provision has been made for the care and support of the insane," and so on. Here is a direct conflict, but it doesn't surprise anybody.

If philanthropists want to do a religious piece of work, and they who have thousands more than they can spend, desire to do a noble act for the worthy poor, they should turn their attention to the widow and daughter of Old John Brown, who, it is said, are living in poverty on a small farm near San Jose, California. Mrs. Brown is seventy years old, and is wholly supported by her good daughter, who is obliged to perform the rough farm-work to earn sufficient food. Their little home is mortgaged for $1000, and the payment of the interest is a serious matter to these lonely women. Those who have any admiration for the sturdy old hero of Harper's Ferry, whose name will always live in American history, should be liberal and prompt in giving them aid.

A CORPORATION WITH NO SOUL.

It was ever true that a corporation had no soul, it is true of the street railway companies in nearly every city in the United States. They are more grinding and more merciless than the most bold and gigantic monopoly in the country. Their general management is a disgrace to our civilization. They have no regard for the persons in their employ, and no mercy for the animals which are unfortunate enough to fall into their hands. The managers are men without conscience, without a spark of feeling for humanity, without the least respect or sympathy for the over-worked and half-clad car-driver, and without compassion for the horses in their employ. Their greed for gain blunts their senses, corrodes their hearts, and deprives them of almost every manly instinct. These traits in the managers of the street railway companies of Chicago has led to the strike which took place this week; and it is refreshing that thousands of well-to-do and intelligent people on the West Side of that city, deeply sympathize with the car conductors and drivers, and prefer to walk rather than patronize a corporation so heartless and cruel as the street-car companies of Chicago. These companies make a fortune every year, and yet they displayed their greed by compelling their employees to work at starvation wages.

Between 600 and 800 men struck for an advance of 20 per cent. in their wages. The companies refused to make an advance, and consequently the drivers and conductors refused to go to work. One day this week the company attempted to run a car, but the people who have practical sympathy for the strikers, dumped it in the gutter, and hereafter propose to stand by the strikers.

The life of a car-driver and a conductor is a life of extreme hardship. They are worked from early morning till late at night, in all sorts of weather, on every day in the week, and for wages that will not keep them in decent clothes and give them a fair living. It is hoped that the street-car men will come out ahead in this contest between them and tyranny and injustice.

CARPENTER'S FUNERAL.

The remains of the late Senator Carpenter arrived in Milwaukee this afternoon, having left Washington on Friday morning. Governor Smith and the legislative committee went to Chicago to-day to meet the congressional committee in charge of the remains, and returned with the cortege. The remains were met at depot in Milwaukee by a large number of civic societies and several companies of the National guard. All that mortal of the brilliant and beloved Matt H. Carpenter will lie in State in the rotunda of the court house until two o'clock on Sunday, when the funeral will take place. The procession will be under orders from Major General Hincks, chief marshal, and will move in the following order:

Chief Marshal and Aids.

Band.

Escort.

Remains.

Clergy.

Family deceased.

Congressional Committee.

State Executive Officers.

State Legislator.

Local Association.

Civil and Military Officers of the United States.

City and County Officers.

Chamber of Commerce.

Merchants' Association.

Citizens.

There has been a general desire on the part of many of our citizens who were personal and warm friends of the deceased Senator, to attend the funeral in Milwaukee, but as there will be no special train on that day, many will be debarred from going. It was hoped that the special train for Sunday which was said would leave Madison would run via Milton Junction, and thus accommodate a large number from Janesville, but according to the State Journal, of last evening, the probabilities are that there will be no special leave this city for Milwaukee on Sunday.

ABOUT AGRICULTURAL SALT.

The Gazette has received from the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway company, a circular which will be of great benefit to farmers. The circular or pamphlet gives the results of the use of salt on old land and in regions infested by chinch bugs. The statements given regarding the experience of farmers are selected from a large number all equally strong in praising the results of the use of salt on lands. We will give one or two of these testimonials simply to show the general character of the evidence on the salt question:

EAGLE, Wis., March 28, 1881.

I have used salt on my lands for years, and always found it beneficial, and have saved chinch bugs, and many other worms and insects that do injury to grain crops. I know it never fails to increase the yield and make the grain larger and more solid, and the straw stiffer. It has saved my crops several times, and I have, in fact, put out to me, and my wife, the money we have saved on our crops. I always recommend it and do not know why any farmer should not use it.

JAMES GRIFFIN.

Mr. Thomas Eckles, writing to the Rochester, (Minnesota) Post, says:

I am not one of those farmers that won't take a good thing when it is offered me. I jumped at the chance of getting some delivered to my land, and I have never regretted it. Some of the neighbors told me I was crazy, wild, and the like, but I sowed the salt on thirty acres of land before I sowed the wheat.

Now the result. My wheat grew right along, never rusted, stood up stiff, and when harvested, was like roads. When I threshed, the wheat was bright and plump, weighing 50 bushels to the acre. Some of my neighbors, who have not yet tried it, are still skeptical, but I have saved their crops. I always recommend it and do not know why any farmer should not use it.

KITTY'S FORTY."

A Tale of Minnesota Winter.

It doesn't do men any good to live apart from women and children. Frontiersmen soften down when women and children come—but I forgot myself; it is the story you want.

Burton and Jones lived in a shanty by themselves. Jones was a married man, but, finding it hard to support his wife, he had emigrated to a down-east village, where he had married a northern Minnesota, leaving his wife under her father's roof until he should make a start. He and Burton had gone into partnership, and had "pre-empted a town site" of 320 acres.

There were, perhaps, twenty families scattered over this town site at the time my story begins and ends, for it ends in the same week in which it begins.

The partners had disagreed, quarreled and divided their interests. The land was all shared between them except one valuable forty-acre piece. Each of them claimed that piece of land, and the quarrel had grown so high between them that the neighbors expected them "to shoot on sight." In fact, it was understood that Burton was on the forty-acre piece, determined to shoot Jones if he came, and Jones had sworn to go out there and shoot Burton, when the fight was postponed by the unexpected arrival of Jones' wife and child.

Jones' shanty was not finished, and he was forced to forego the luxury of fighting his old partner in his exertions to make wife and baby comfortable for the night. For the winter sun was surrounded by "sun dogs." Instead of one sun there were four, an occurrence not uncommon in this latitude, but one which always boded a terrible storm.

In his endeavors to care for his wife and child, Jones was modified a little, and half regretted he had been so violent a bout the piece of land. But he was determined not to be backed down, and he certainly would have to shoot Burton or he shot himself.

When he thought of the chance of being killed by his old partner, the prospect was not pleasant. He looked wistfully at Kitty, his two-year-old child, and dreaded that she would be left fatherless. Nevertheless, he wouldn't be backed down. He would shoot or be shot down.

While the husband was busy cutting wood, the mother was busy otherwise, little Kitty managed to get the shanty door open. There was no latch as yet, and her prying little hands easily swung it back. A gust of cold air almost took away her breath, but she caught sight of the brown grass without, and the new world seemed so big that the little feet were fain to try and explore it.

She pushed out through the door, caught her breath again, and started away down the path bordered by snow grass and the dead stalks of the wild sunflower. How often she had longed to escape from restraint and paddle out into the world alone. So out into the world she went, rejoicing in her liberty, in the blue sky above and the rusty prairie beneath. She would find out where the path went, and what there was at the end of the world. What did she care if her nose was blue with cold and her chubby hands as red as beets? Now and then she paused to turn her head away from the rude blast, a forerunner of the storm; but, having gasped a moment, she quickly renewed her brave march in search of the great unknown.

Her mother missed her and supposed that Jones, who could not get enough of the child's society, had taken the little one with him.

Jones, poor fellow, sure that the darling was safe within, chopped away until a awful storm broke upon him, and at last drove him half smothered by the snow, and half frozen by cold into the house.

When there was nothing left but retreat, he had seized an armful of wood and carried it into the house with him, to make sure of having enough to keep his wife and Kitty from freezing in the coming awfulness of the night, which now settled down upon the snow beaten world.

It was the beginning of that horrible storm in which so many people were frozen to death, and Jones had fled none to soon.

When once the wood was stacked by the stove, Jones looked around for Kitty. He had not more than enquired for her, her father and mother each read in the others face that she was lost in this wild storm of snow.

So fast did the snow fall, and so dark was the night that Jones could not see three feet ahead of him. He endeavored to follow the path which he thought Kitty might have taken, but it was so buried in snow drifts that he soon lost himself.

He stumbled through the drifts, calling out to Kitty in his distress, but not knowing whether he went.

After an hour of despairing, wandering and shouting, he came to a house, and rapping on the door he found himself face to face with his wife.

He had returned to his own house in his bewilderment.

When we remember that Jones had not slept for the two nights preceding this one, on account of his mortal quarrel with Burton, and he had now been beating against an Arctic hurricane and tramping through treacherous billows of snow for an hour, we cannot wonder that he fell over his own threshold in a state of extreme exhaustion.

Happy for him that he did not fall bewildered on the prairie, as many another poor wayfarer did on that fatal night!

As it was, his wife must needs give up the van little searches she had been making in the neighborhood of the shanty. She had now a sick husband with frozen hands and feet and face to care for. Every minute the thermometer fell lower, and lower and all the heat the little cook stove in Jones' shanty could give would hardly keep them from freezing.

Burton had stayed upon that forty acre lot all day, waiting for a chance to shoot his old partner, Jones. He had not heard of the arrival of Jones' wife, and so he concluded that his enemy had proved a coward, and had left him in possession, or else that he meant to play him some treacherous trick on his way home.

So Burton resolved to keep a sharp lookout. But he soon found that impossible, for the storm was upon him in all its fury. He tried to follow the path but he could not find it.

Had he been less of a frontiersman he must have perished there, within a fur-long of his own house. But in endeavoring to keep the direction of the path he heard a smothered cry, and then saw something rise up covered with snow and fall down again. He raised his gun to shoot it, when the creature uttered another wailing cry so human that he put down his gun and went cautiously forward.

It was a child. He did not remember that there was such a child among all the settlers in Newton. But he did not stop to ask questions. He must, without delay, get himself and the child to a place of safety, or both would be frozen.

He took the little thing in his arms and started through the drifts. And the child put its little icy fingers on Burton's rough neck and muttered "mama!" And Burton held her closer, and tought the snow more courageously than ever.

He found the shanty at last, and rolled the child in a buffalo robe while he made a fire. Then when he got the room a little warm, he took the little thing upon his knee, dipped her aching fingers in cold water, and asked her what her name was.

"Kitty," she said.

"Kitty," he said, "and what else?"

"Kitty," she answered, nor could he find out any more.

"Whose Kitty are you?"

"Your Kitty," she said. For she had known her father but that one day, and now she believed that Burton was he.

Burton sat up all night and stuffed wood into his impotent little stove to keep the baby from freezing to death. Never having had to do with children, he firmly believed that Kitty, sleeping snugly under blankets and buffalo robes would freeze if he should let the fire subside in the least.

As the storm prevailed with unabated fury the next day, and as he dared neither to take Kitty out nor to leave her alone, he stayed by her all day and stuffed the stove with wood, and laughed at her droll talk, fed her on biscuit, fried bacon and coffee.

On the morning of the second day the storm had abated. It was forty degrees cold, but knowing that somebody dead must be mourning Kitty for dead, he wrapped her in skins, and with much difficulty reached the nearest neighbor's house, suffering only a frost-bite on the nose by the way.

"That child," said the woman to whose house he had come, "is Jones'; I send 'em take her outen the wagon day before yesterday."

Burton looked at Kitty in perplexity; then he rolled her up again and started out. "Traveling like mad," the woman said, as she watched him.

When he reached Jones' he found Jones and his wife sitting in bitter wretchedness by the fire. They were both sick from grief, and unable to move out of the house. Kitty they had given up to buried alive under some snowdrift. They would find her when spring should come and melt the snow covering off.

When the exhausted Burton came in with his bundle of buffalo-skins they looked at him with amazement. But when he opened it and let out the little Kitty, and said:

"Here, Jones, this is your Kitty?" Mrs. Jones couldn't think of anything better.

And Jones got up and took his old partner's hand and said: "Burton, ole fellow!" and then shook up and sat down, and cried helplessly.

And Burton said: "Jones, ole fellow, you may have that forty-acre patch. It came mighty nigh makin' me the murderer of that little Kitty's father."

"No! if you shall have to take it yourself," cried Jones, "if you shall have to go to law to make you."

And Jones actually deeded his interest in the forty acres to Burton. But Burton transferred it all to Kitty.

That's why this part of Newton is called to-day "Kitty's Forty."

Singular Climate Effects.

It is a singular fact that almost every body loses flesh on coming here from the East. The average loss in weight sustained is about one-eighth. For instance, in the course of two or three months a 200 pound man loses twenty-five pounds and becomes a 175 pounder. This is due to the high altitude of Denver—a mile above the sea—to the dry and light atmosphere, to the scarcity of vegetation and to the comparative abundance of oxygen, which consumes the tissues and taxes the vital functions to a greater extent than on lower altitudes. Higher up it is much worse than here. At Leadville, for instance, which is two miles above the sea level, the diminution in weight does not generally fall short of a sixth or seventh and it takes place much more rapidly than here. In that high altitude, too, lung diseases, such as pneumonia, very frequently set in, and they prove fatal in about thirty per cent. of the cases attacked. But very few dogs except hounds, can live in Leadville, and no cats survive there. In Denver however, we have a multitude of both dogs and cats, and they appear to experience no special difficulty about living and getting fat. Yet it is a noticeable fact that animals and men lose a share of their strength after coming here. After being here two or three months their muscular power is not near so great as in the East. Nor can they endure so much hard work. Eight hours of continuous labor does more to exhaust and prostrate a man here than ten hours in Illinois or Wisconsin. And when worn out and prostrated a feeling of lassitude and drowsiness is very difficult to dispel comes over one. In such instances many hours of rest are requisite to impair and rebuild the wasted energies. Mental labor is even more exhausting than physical. A healthy man may do manual labor for eight or ten hours a day, and experience from no specially evil effects; but let mental labor be pursued with like assiduity, and the nervous system becomes weakened and irritable. In time the physical powers become disordered and weakened by sympathy and by the strain upon them to supply the brain waste. These facts are more predictable of new-comers than of those who have resided for a year or more at high altitudes. Persons and animals thoroughly acclimated do not experience these drawbacks. Indeed these could not look better anywhere than they appear here. The great difficulty is in getting acclimated. —Philadelphia Times.

Giving Young Mechanics a Time ly Bit of Encouragement.

The American Institute of New York has taken pity, in a praiseworthy way, on a deserving class of the human race, generally snubbed and thrust into out-of-the-way places. It has taken steps for bringing to public notice the growing boys and the work they are trying to do. Heretofore, at the exhibition of this institute and of others such as our Franklin Institute and the various industrial and agricultural corporations which hold exhibitions, the desire has been to display only the handsomely-finished work of experienced workmen. This is worthy of commendation as far as it goes, and it cannot be denied that such work is more likely to attract attention and to command admiration than the rough attempts of boys who have received but partial education in mechanical art-work. But the pleasure of looking on elegant handiwork is one thing and that of encouraging the army of rising workmen is another. Any experienced workman ought to turn out good work. It is expected of him, and the fact that he exceeds expectations with it creates no surprise. As to the partially educated workman it is in some degree a wonder that he accomplishes anything in a manner fit to be seen. He is but a student who has not completed his course of study. In some cases he has had unreasonable and tyrannical educators. In others, he has been his own teacher and has acquired information and skill under circumstances of great discouragement. The invitation now issued by the American Institute is to all amateurs and young persons who are beginning to learn mechanical arts, or who have made any reasonable progress in them, to exhibit specimens of all branches of effort, from painting a stick of timber to the fabrication of a complete steam engine. No more direct encouragement to the lads can be conceived of than this. It is understood that the exhibited specimens of work are not expected to be perfect as those made by the artisans who have spent a lifetime on what the youngsters are just beginning. Of course the amateurs are to do their best. No youth exhibiting work with his name on it would want to show anything very inferior. Pride will prevent slovenliness and ambition will stimulate to the execution of the best that under the circumstances can be made.

Young men who want to be mechanics have a great deal to contend against. Under the old apprentice system they had it hard enough. Then they were in much more intimate relations with their employers than under the present system. Now a lad who is taken "to learn the business" finds to his cost that he is more of an errand boy and a drudge than a student. Much of what he learns is in spite of the people who are supposed to teach him rather than as the result of their efforts. It is their interest too frequently to keep him down so as to continue his wages at as low a figure as possible. Many a boy in a foundry or factory or mill, who manages to pick up some knowledge of the business is for a considerable time made to do a man's work for boy's wages. He may remonstrate, but the remonstrance of a lad against a capitalist or a corporation amounts to very little. The boy who has a chance to exhibit his work, as contemplated by the present action of the American Institute, has also a chance to display his skill to the people whose good opinion of it may be worth having. It is a good thing thus to bring boys forward with a wholesome stimulus. The present race of artisans will not last forever. The world looks to the coming boys to take the place of the going men. It has a direct interest in educating these boys so as to make the most of them, both for themselves and for society. To snub a boy is cruel and mean. To stimulate him to deeds of excellence is noble and generous. —Philadelphia Times.

Burnett's Cocaine for the Loss of Hair.

CHICAGO, Oct. 11, 1880.

Three years ago my hair was coming out very fast, and I was nearly bald. I was also troubled with dandruff. I began using BURNETT'S COCAINE, and my hair immediately stopped coming out, and has constantly been getting thicker. My head is now entirely free from dandruff. My wife has used the COCAINE with equally gratifying results.

A Reform Called for in Pork Raising.

Public opinion has been trained so long in favor of improved breeds of pigs that farmers have become somewhat daft on the subject. They have been governed by this public opinion and seeming economy, until they have about driven pork from the table, and made a nation of epicures who turn away from pork, and even ham, with disgust. Our forefathers lived longer than the present generation are likely to, and were men of brains as well as muscle. Pork constituted their chief meat diet. This is not the case now.

This change is not because pigs' flesh is necessarily more unpalatable, but because the character of the meat has been changed from a wholesome and desirable food to mere lard tubs.

Advanced public opinion now-a-days demands a direct interest in educating these boys so as to make the most of them, both for themselves and for society.

To stimulate him to deeds of excellence is noble and generous. —Philadelphia Times.

The Imperturbable MacGahan.

MACGAHAN did not know how to fret.

His nature was of the sunniest temper.

He accepted the trouble with genial heroism that was unique. I never saw him ruffled, although I once heard him threaten to shoot a man.

He uttered the threat in a bland drawl; he pulled out his revolver with a smile, and when the hulking ruffian backed down, he resumed the thread of the interrupted conversation with a calm deliberation in which there was not so much as a quiver of the voice.

"He'd get along all right," he said, "in spite of the broken bone; he never had cared much for walking, and now he'd simply ride all the more."

He limped all through the campaign, and would have been lame for life, had he lived to be an old man.

But spite of his lameness, the Russians called him the "Cossack correspondent," so dashing alert were his movements.

The life of hurry and overwork many of us live has much to do with our impatience, and if we can do anything to remove the cause we ought to do it as a matter of duty.

I know there are many fathers and mothers upon whom the burden of life rests so heavily they can hardly get needed sleep. But many times the tired housekeeper and mother might "lighten the ship" a little.

When God sends trouble and lets us bear it in His strength, but let us be very careful about the unnecessary burdens we take upon our own shoulders.

Plain, neat hemis, with a cheery-hearted mother are infinitely better for children than a multitude of tufts and ruffles, with a sad, disheartened mother who has no time to help her family to wise and good.

Don't let an ambition to outshine our neighbors, or even to have the best kept house and most glittering windows, blind us to the fact that sunshine and cheer are good for both body and soul.

Then do not let us make ourselves miserable by borrowing trouble that may never come. We sometimes utterly unfit ourselves for the work of life by anticipating sorrows. God never meant us to bear.

Don't cross a bridge till you come to it, it is a poor old and of excellent wit."

A little time spent judiciously in preventing the causes of sickness in a family, is better than years of wailing over what might have been" or what may be.

—Arthur's Magazine.

A Boston bookseller tells a very romantic story as follows: At one time I had prepared boxes of fancy paper with a fancy initial or put name embossed in it, and I put this up at one dollar a box and advertised it widely. One day I had an order from California, from a Miss Susie —. The box was done up, addressed to her and lay about here when a young Englishman came in and wanted to write a letter. I gave him the materials and a place, when his eye caught the address on this box.

"Have you the order that came for that box of paper?" he asked.

"Yes," I replied, "it is about somewhere."

"Would you mind sending it up to my hotel? If it is what I think I shall leave for California to-night."

I found it sent around and heard no more about it for perhaps three months, when one day the young man, with a lady on his arm, walked in. "I want to present you to my wife," he said.

"We could not leave this country till we had thanked you for your part in bringing us together."

The young man was the son of an aristocratic family and the girl the daughter of the gardener. But love levels all distinctions, and the young man felt this girl to be the chosen companion of his life. To break off the attachment his father had sent him to the continent and dispatched the gardener and his pretty daughter to America, where the young man had followed them, ignorant of their address, and at last finding it through the chance of the box of paper.

BRIEFLETS.

To-morrow is Palm Sunday.

Can't a physician treat his patients even?

F. W. Crosby, of Preston, Kean & Co., Chicago, is in the city.

April is to-day showing how well it can behave when it wants to.

Mrs. A. J. Wadsworth and son, of Monroe, were in the city to-day.

It looks like crowding matters a little to roll out the ice wagons just yet.

A. S. Baker of Evansville has just secured a patent on a feed grinding mill.

Only one more week before Easter Sunday. Hurry up with those new bonnets.

R. D. Torrey, of Oshkosh, Secretary of the Northern Agricultural Society, is in the city to-day.

William Cannon and family are planning to spend the summer in the Rocky mountains.

Tom Russell left this morning to join Van Amburg's show this season. He is to have charge of the privileges.

Robert Filkins, who has charge of the general advertising of the Robbins' & Colvin allied shows, has arrived in the city.

Green glasses are necessarily becoming quite fashionable. Many cases of inflamed eyelids, in spite of the anti-treating law.

Hanchett & Sheldon have a gay, new truck, which attracts attention on the street. It is substantial as well as handsome, and means business.

It is really astonishing how many people from the country managed to get into the city to-day, considering the horrid condition of the roads.

Rev. S. B. Loomis, has arranged to give the All Souls folk a series of discourses on Bible characters, the first of which is to be given to-morrow.

There is to be a German service to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock in the First Methodist church. Rev. J. Berger, of Fort Atkinson, will preach.

The roads of the county are now growing worse daily, and the snow is being superseded by mud and slush, which is neither fitted for bobs nor for wheels.

Mrs. Sarah Cobb, while busy about her home yesterday, slipped and fell, causing quite a serious injury to her shoulder, which disables her for the present.

Blue birds are here. The weather has for some time caused blue folk to appear, but if the birds don't see any hope ahead, bring on the sackcloth and ashes.

At a meeting of the Rock County Agricultural Society this afternoon, it was decided to give Robert Ellison a three years lease of the grounds and tract.

Grant Williams, son of Orange Williams, is at home again. He is not in very rugged health, but is able to be about, and is warmly greeted by his many friends.

All Souls church folk had a happy social gathering last evening, which was attended by fifty or more ladies and gentlemen all of whom seemed to enjoy the occasion heartily.

The ladies' missionary society of the Baptist church yesterday afternoon elected Mrs. Eliza Treat President; Miss Mary Hoskins, Vice President, and Mrs. R. V. Brand Treasurer.

On and after to-morrow evening the evening services of the several churches will begin at 7:30 o'clock instead of 7 o'clock. Church goers and bell ringers should remember this.

They were two philosophers who met this time. One said—"Warm weather won't come until the snow goes off." The other said—"The snow won't go off until warm weather comes." There it is again.

The Round Table studies French literature this evening with papers by the Revs. T. P. Sawin, T. W. MacLean, F. L. Chapell, and Miss Carrie Zeininger, and Mr. B. F. Dunwiddie.

The town of Bradford is reported as giving Judge Patten 91 majority, which gives him a total of 337 over Brooks. Beloit is the only town now to be heard from, and that is said to have given Patten a majority also.

The Russell Sisters have removed their millinery rooms to Tallman's block, over the C. O. D. store, where they are receiving a fine line of the latest styles of all kinds of millinery goods. Do not fail to give them a call.

Two well-dressed tramps, claiming to hail from Baraboo, and being destitute of money, appeared before Justice Nolan this morning and were sentenced to two days each in jail. They went down humming "two times two are four."

W. W. Kimball, of Chicago, proposes to have a branch here for the sale of musical instruments, pianos, organs, etc. J. M. Root, who is to be the manager of this branch, is in the city, and is arranging to make his headquarters at F. S.

Lawrence & Co., after May 1. In the meantime he will attend to some business in the surrounding country.

Cairns brothers hope to be able to commence in a few days clearing away the ruins of their old store preparatory to building a new one. The cinders and rubbish have all been frozen so snugly that it has been impossible to do anything toward clearing the ground, as the sun does not get much of a chance to work there. Now that the thawing has begun it is hoped that it will keep up sufficiently to prepare the way for the shovellers.

Charles Penniman, now of Madison, but who has lived here so long that Janeville still claims him as one of her own, arrived in the city yesterday for a few days' stay, representing the interests of "Damon the tailor," for whom he is taking orders and measures for suits of clothes. He carries a large line of samples, and has a happy way of showing them up. Mr. Penniman is a very skillful cutter, and outside of business popularity, has many friends here who are glad to welcome him whenever he chooses to appear.

The special venue for seventy-five jurors in the Ohlins' murder case was returnable this morning, and it is quite probable that no jury will be agreed upon before Monday. It is said that the attorneys on both sides prefer to have a change of venue to some other county, because of the prejudice of the people, but Ohlins himself insists on being tried there. He claims that he is innocent, and being so he prefers to have the evidence brought out right at home. His health is said to be quite poor, and long confinement is causing indications of consumption.

The young men who have had some interest awakened in the formation of a bicycle club here, met at Doe & Hyzer's office last evening, and had a chat over the matter. No formal action was taken beyond deciding to send to Chicago to ascertain prices, etc. It is doubtful if any club is formed at present as the bicycles command a price varying from $80 to $175, and some of the young men seem to think horse flesh is cheaper in proportion. There are some who will probably invest in bicycles, but probably not enough to warrant the organizing of a club.

Mr. Salsbury, of San Francisco, one of the largest stage route contractors in the whole country, and a
